Letters to the Editor are welcome. They do not necessarily represent the views of this paper. If you want to have your say, please send your letter to the Dillsburg Banner, 31 S. Baltimore Street, Dillsburg PA 17019

Dear Editor:

Recently, a letter was published regarding Robert F. Bostic, athletic director of Northern Senior High School. This letter was submitted by a Northern student, Tony Kloss, who holds the opinion that Mr. Bostic "has not performed as a desirable athletic director should act".

Tony is displeased over an incident where he and "many of his friends" painted their faces purple and white for a Northern home football game. They were "cheering and chanting" and "trying to promote school spirit", but were upset when Mr. Bostic had them disbanded because "their spirit was giving the other fans the wrong idea about the conduct of students at games". This student feels that Mr. Bostic "does not want to encourage school spirit, but to avoid active participation in the spirit push".

Then he continues with his letter, saying that Mr. Bostic does not "sell" the excellent athletes at Northern to scholarship institutions when it is time for college recruiting.

Come on, now. Let's think about this for a minute. Mr. Bostic has been a well-respected athletic director and teacher at Northern since 1957. I think it would be safe to assume that after all those years of experience, the man would certainly know when a show of "spirit" is in good taste, as well as when it isn't. It would also be nice to think that in our society today, we would at least be to the point where a college scholarship would depend more upon those individuals who are legitimately deserving of it, and less upon who has painted his face purple for a football game. It certainly ought to work that way, and I think it does. Those individuals who have worked hard and excelled will generally attain that which they deserve, be it a college scholarship or whatever. And you can't go through life waiting for Mr. Bostic or anyone else to "sell you"--that is something that only each of us can do for ourselves.

I, myself, graduated from Northern, and I had Mr. Bostic as a teacher and a class advisor for four years. I think it can be stated categorically that Mr. Bostic, in his 33 years at Northern, has helped and been a positive influence to countless individuals. If you and I are able to positively affect even half as many people in our own lives, Tony, we're certainly going to help the world become a better place. Let's work on it, and let us also salute a dedicated and well-respected man when we see one. To Mr. Bostic, from myself and many others: Thank you for your hard work and dedication. Please know that you have touched many lives and that you are appreciated.

Respectfully,
Kathy Fyler

Season opener marred by accidents

The 1990 general small game and turkey hunting season began Saturday with what wildlife conservation officers say was an excellent day afield across most of the state. Rabbits and wild turkeys proved plentiful, and a fair number of wild and stocked pheasants were taken.

Unfortunately, the otherwise fine season opener was seriously marred by a number of tragic and needless hunting accidents. Based on preliminary reports compiled by the commission's hunter-trapper education division, at least 20 accidents occurred, in seven of which hunters were shot by mistake for turkeys three fatally.

"In each fatal accident," noted Jim Filkosky, who heads the HTE division, "the offenders were using scoped rifles yet, for still unexplained reasons, the victims were mistakenly shot for wild turkeys. Two victims were wearing camouflage clothing; the third a blue denim jacket and ball cap. The victims were shot at distances ranging from 65 to 275 yards." Filkosky said the fatal accidents, which happened in Armstrong, Fulton and Warren counties, are still being investigated by district WCOs.

On the brighter side, officers noted that turkeys were more cooperative and hunters scored more consistently than in 1989. Like last year, hunters did better on rabbits than other small game, and most pheasant hunting success can be attributed to the commission's stocking program which will see 200,000 birds released by mid-November.

Proper transfer of car title

If you're selling a vehicle in a private transaction, Rep. Bruce Smith says it's important to make certain that the title to the vehicle is properly transferred.

Smith said the seller of a vehicle in a private transaction should never hand the title over to the buyer. The title should be notarized to ensure that a record of the transaction is made on the title.

The legislator said there have been cases in which the seller of a vehicle turned the title over to the buyer without having the transaction notarized. Consequently, there was no legal record of the vehicle transfer on the title in instances in which the buyer did not process the transaction with the Transportation Department.

In those instances, the seller is responsible for all tickets and any lawsuits as a result of accidents caused by the buyer, he said. It should be noted that the legal responsibility rests with the individual whose name is recorded with PennDOT's Bureau of Motor Vehicles.

Title notarization can be done by a notary public, any automobile club or at many car dealerships.

Smith said the notary step can save both the buyer and seller many headaches should a question arise over insurance coverage or legal ownership.

Northern youth cheerleading and drill team squads compete

The five cheerleading and drill team squads of the Northern Youth Recreation Association have worked long and hard since practice began the first week of August, and recently they were able to show that these hours were well spent.

On Saturday, October 20, the three cheerleading squads traveled to Spring Grove for their annual competition with each member anxious to enter both the dance and cheer division and to show the Northern pride.

Each squad did very well. The PeeWee squad (ages 7-9) received a second place in cheers and a third place in dance. The Pony squad (ages 10-11) placed first in cheers and second in dance. The Midget squad (ages 12-13) showed great spirit and determination when they performed well despite Spring Groves' sound system failure each time they performed their dance.

Our two drill teams (Pee Wee and Pony-Midget) could not compete as Spring Grove has no specialty division, but our two great groups were invited to perform as the special half-time entertainment.

The following Saturday, Northern hosted their own competition at the Northern Middle School. Our competition is the largest such competition for this age level in the area. Twelve different organizations were represented and Northern's own high school Varsity Football cheerleaders were the special exhibition. In this particular competition, there are divisions for cheerleaders and also for specialty squads.

After a very long and exciting day, the winners were announced and Northern once again took many honors, and each of our five participating squads looked like rais! The Pee Wee squad took a third in cheers and a second in dance. The Pony squad took a first in cheers. The Midget cheerleaders took fourth in cheers. The PeeWee drill team (ages 7-9) took the first place honors in their division.

Now the football season is drawing to an end and the drill teams are packing away their flags and streamers till next year. Our cheerleaders are preparing for their last competition that on Saturday, November 10 at Elizabethtown.

Talk about wearing alot of hats - Richard Deardorff of Impala Drive needs the whole basement to hang his hats. Deardorff started collecting hats 20 years ago and now has over 3,500 of them.

Hats ,Hats, Hats, over 3,500 of them!

by Stacy Wescoe

Trying to decide what to get Richard Deardorf for Christmas, Father's Day or birthdays has never been a problem as the 3,600 hats that cover a large of his basement walls and ceiling verify.

"Whenever someone wants to buy me something, that's what I get," Mr. Deardorf heartily responded.

Over the last 20 years Mr. Deardorf has amassed a collection of hats that would deifinitely be the envy of any hat-clad little leaguer player. After his retirement from farming in Barrow's Valley, Franklintown, Mr. Deardorf went to work at the Farm Show Arena in Harrisburg, where dealers would come and leave their business hats for advertisement. At the time of his retirement from the Farm Show, Mr. Deardorf had collected 500 to 600 hats while making a name for himself as a hat enthusiast.

"Everybody knows that I save caps. The other morning someone just left one in my truck," laughed Mr. Deardorf. "Some people take their caps right off their heads for me. They say I look at their caps before I even look at their faces," he continued. Others are a little more reluctant to part with their hats though, as the purchaser of his farm sent him a picture of a hat Mr. Deardorf had expressed an interest. Still there are others willing to go half way, like Mr. Deardorf's son Kevin, who added a hat to his collection on loan. For the most part, though, when people see Mr. Deardorf coming a hat is usually in the wings waiting for him.

After walking down the stairs of the Deardorf's basement, the initial burst of colors immediately captures the sights and expressions of anyone gazing on the multitude of hats for the first time: an involuntary "wow" is sure to follow. A Saturday morning bargain buster at the Deardorf's recent yard sale was in awe of Mr. Deardorf's hat collection and said that she never saw anything like it.

The two most recent acquisitions to his collection were a Ford Tractor hat and a Rutter's Dairy hat given to him during the Farmer's Dairy hat. I told him I wouldn't mind having it and the next day he brought me one," said Mr. Deardorf as he explained his direct-approach method. "Every year when I go back to the Farm Show the man that sells the caps tells me he has one waiting for me as soon as I walk in," he continued.

The hat haven in his basement is arranged in such categories as places of interest, baseball and football teams, the annual horse and sportsman shows at the Farm Show arena, and many others, including a Dillsburg section which includes a Meyer's Food Rite hat. The hat Mr. Deardorf boasts of most from his collection is a 1988 US Olympic hat given to him by the captain of the S.S. Oil Freighter whom he had met while on vacation in Connecticut. "He signed it and took it right off his head and gave it too me," laughed Mr. Deardorf about this unusual occurrence.

There are occasions when Mr. Deardorf will receive duplicate hats, but that's no problem because there's always other hat collectors willing to trade. "Once I heard the doorbell ring and there was a big six-foot man holding a bag of caps asking if my husband was in so he could trade caps with him," said Mr. Deardorf's wife Marguerite.

Mrs. Deardorf admires her husbands growing collection, but has set boundaries in the basement to where the hats cannot pass. "When we were looking for houses we looked for one to put the hats in, nothing else," chuckled Mrs. Deardorf. She initially told Mr. Deardorf the hats had to be kept in the garage, but when the numbers got too large she graciously gave up her plans for a family room for her husband's collection.

Taking into consideration the size of Mr. Deardorf's collection, one would think that he never has a problem choosing a hat to wear, but that's not the case. "I hardly ever wear hats," explained Mr. Deardorf. Sometimes he wears them to advertise in appreciation for a hat given to him, but his hats can usually be found on his wall rather than on his head.

If there is ever a hat that has tot it's use or just wants to be given away, there are 3,600 hats at The Deardorf's Dillsburg residence that would welcome the addition.
